

Into the Woods – An Informative Workshop for Friends of Wood and Woods

Join us for an inspiring, challenging, active, and fun immersion into the wild world of our remarkable forests, the native trees that grow in them, the wood they provide, and their connections to your life and work.

The Build Local Alliance is offering this two hour training and workshop to 25 diverse friends of forests and wood who seek to deepen their understandings and connections. Whether you are an end-user, woodworker, forest owner, wood processor, or just have a general interest, this workshop is designed for you.

You'll learn about:

- The unique and surprising traits and needs of more than twelve native tree species – and the roles they play in the forest ecology
- The distinctive characteristics of the wood that comes from these trees and the roles that each play in our daily lives
- The impact your wood-related choices have, and can have, on forests, near and far
- Ways that you and fellow wood choosers can strengthen your connections to and have a positive influence on local forests

Instructors will include: Michael Ahr, Forest Conservationist with West Multnomah Soil & Water Conservation District, and Peter Hayes, forester and sawmiller with Hyla Woods

If you are looking for an active learning adventure, you're encouraged to join us.

When? Oct. 18, 2017, 7-9 PM

Where? World Forestry Center, David Douglas Room, 4033 SW Canyon Rd, Portland

Cost? No charge

Reserve Your Spot (space is limited)? <https://intothewoodsportland.eventbrite.com/>

"My clients value the deeper understanding of local native trees and the many connections between all of us and sustainable forests that the Into the Woods workshop fosters in a fun and friendly format. Don't miss it!" - james thompson, jetwoodshop